When someone you love has anxiety, their list is likely to look at little like this: It's no biggie. So don't act like it is. In the thick of an anxiety attack nothing will make sense, so best not to ask what's going on or if they're okay. No. They won't be okay. And yes. It will feel like the world is falling apart at the seams.

It is not easy to be involved with a person who has a drinking problem. It takes a lot of patience and love. You also need to set certain boundaries for your own actions so you don't encourage the person's behavior or let it affect you. Don't lie or make excuses for your loved one's drinking. Don't take on responsibilities for your loved one.
